

On the first of June, 1871, the present prosperous and enlightened firm of Estes and Pinson was organized. On the coming of his death Colonel Pinson turned over to his bed-side his partners, viz., Z. N. Estes and General John C. Ayer, and requested them to select a lot for his last resting-place in Elmwood cemetery, preferring, as he said, a spot

FATHER RYAN, the poet-patriot, is dead, but living. He recent-returned from a tour of the of several months in Europe, his general health being greatly improved.

He is stated on authority of members his own party, that Washburne, of discussion, will not be sent to the United States senate again. He has made too much money in office.

He had decided not to visit Belgrade, but he wanted to make a statement to the press and to make the public thinking he reconsider his decision. A delegation comes to consult with him, and he goes to the opera. Five thousand people are there, and he is surrounded by thirty thousand fans for five performances at the Italianas.

"A very good story is being told in a mixture of professional circles respecting a local examination held by the Italian authorities. In the examination, they were asked to give other things besides the usual things. They were asked to give the career of Oliver Cromwell. One of them wrote in vague, but unflattering, terms, that Cromwell was a very good man, apparently thinking that he had never heard of him. The other, who was sufficiently precise, this youth, said that Cromwell was a very good man, but that Cromwell had died very unhappily, and on his deathbed, exclaimed 'God damn my God as well as I have damn'd myself.' The youth then said to me now that I am gay-headed."

giving board of Indian commissioners at Philadelphia, has written a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, in reference to the charges of unfairness in the recent awards of contracts for Indian supplies, which he says that the complaints are indefinite and unfounded, and thus in behalf of himself and colleagues, thorough examination.

The most accommodating man we saw was he who was captain of a ship which plied between New York and Port Royal during the war. One day a soldier lost his cap overboard, and went to the captain to get it. The gentleman said it was impossible to get the vessel to recover it, but he did offer to make a mark on the spot where it went overboard, and get it when he came back. We saw him make the mark himself, and well remember that in all that motley crowd there was not a dry eye.
